1. Introduction

The project is designed to monitor in the long-term the dynamic changes of the Agulhas Current, with particular reference to the salt, heat and volume transport of this powerful western boundary current and the impacts it has on the climate and coastal inshore regions.

For the mooring deployments to be successful, counter-balance weights are needed to hold the moorings in place on the seafloor. This will be done using large concrete blocks, but will be augmented by railway lines from discarded railway track sections, cut into 1 m lengths for ease of use.
